FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

If it is necessary for women to be hideous in order to acquire health in outdoor amusements, I am afraid that sports will not be popular. The photographs of a society girl who has achieved notoriety by her riding costume are not calculated to inspire yearning in the feminine heart, for the average woman wants to be pretty above everything. Women in trousers and mannish coats and hats are not attractive in real life, whatever they may be behind the footlights.

It is not necessary to discard femininity to secure comfort. Short skirts are both comfortable and pretty, and becoming plain hats are obtainable. Bloomers can replace petticoats, and tailored waists are pretty and every whit as comfortable as the ugly outing shirt affected by men. It has never been anything but a mistake for a woman to attempt to get away from her sex.

A noted feminine motorist says that driving a car gives a woman self-reliance and a sense of responsibility. So do many other occupations, and only the occasional woman loses by it. I used to see a woman selling the products of her farm from house to house in a town where she was a resident, and I remember the shock I received when I learned that she was a grandmother. I was not surprised to hear that her husband had left her years before, for a man did not seem to fit into her life. There were not many traces of femininity about her; there never had been, I was told, and that was why a really decent man preferred to go elsewhere and live as a man should.

Some years ago a handsome actress took up masculinity as a fad. She wore short hair, dressed as nearly like a man as the law permitted, smoked, drank, and was thoroughly independent. She had been greatly admired by the other sex, but men gradually drew away from her and paid court to women who lived up to their sex. When she realized that she dropped her habits and was a charming woman again. She married, and that is the end of the story as far as I know.

The belle of a watering place noted for its beautiful women was a Southern girl, slow in movement, soft in voice, and indolent by nature. She was conspicuous in a row of athletic girls with browned faces and loud voices, and it was soon discovered that in the trail of her fluffy skirts were all the desirable men of the place, men who were willing to hang about the veranda and shower attentions upon her. How long, think you, was it before softness of manner and refinement was general? BETTY BRADEN.

Asparagus Omelette. Break four eggs into a bowl and beat until light and foamy. Add four tablespoons of cream, a saltspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper. Have ready a clean, smooth omelette pan and melt a tablespoonful of butter in it, letting it run all over the pan to grease sides as well as bottom. When hissing hot pour in the egg mixture. As it cooks prick with a fork in several places to allow the uncooked portion to run under. Lift with the fork until the whole is of creamy consistency. Turn in readiness several spoonfuls of melted butter, a few drops of lemon juice and a teaspoonful chopped parsley. Spread evenly over the top of the omelette, double dextrously and shake out of the pan on the hot platter.

Beautiful Hands. From the Philadelphia North American. The distinction of having the smallest hands in the world belongs to the American women, and next to them come the ladies of Austria, Spain, France, and Italy. Russians have long but beautifully shaped hands, while those of Spaniards are often spoiled by the thickness of the fingers, which are apt to be rounded at the tips. The hands of aristocratic Englishwomen are generally well shaped, but they are somewhat long and are apt to be too dry. No one takes such good care of her hands as the French grande dame. Germans generally have somewhat large, flat hands, with very large fingers.

By MRS. A. G. WHIPPLER.

Letitia says the soul has no windows, but there is a legend to the effect that a mirror reveals in its dimness or brightness some weird sympathy with every emotion of the soul. Therefore mirrors were of old employed in those magical rites believed to influence life and death, and were buried with those to whom they belonged.

To-night the faces of women rise before me, as I look into my cup of divination. Some are smiling mockingly, and others look back at me with serene sympathy.

My dear sisters, you seem to read my heart to-night. How did you know? This is the first hour that I have belonged to myself for years, and I do not know yet whether I like it or not. We did not quarrel, mind you. We knew each other too well for that. Passing over the thin ice of courtship and engagement, we had reached the solid ground—shall I say rock of matrimony—where we walked in seeming safety. We quite forgot that many rocks are of volcanic origin, and that old fires sometimes break out after years of inactivity. We were so happy and so quiet. Marriage, dear sisters, is a sort of sedative. Sometimes I thought I had died in my happiness and it had become a fixed state—I, who had been so restless, with such a gnawing creature shut up in my breast that it would not let me sleep at night—would let me make no place my home. It struggled and tore at me in love or in hate, in anguish or in joy, and I loved all wild things that answered to it—the wild winds, the wild changes of human desire, the wild dreams of womanhood. Oh, and the wild longings of the man's spirit imprisoned in the soft form of each feminine creature. Sometimes I felt that I wanted to awaken and have my restless heart once more. I did not breathe this, but, perhaps, Jack was feeling the same way. The break came—how, we scarcely know.

You know, sisters, love is so fragile that an unkind look flashing through the eyes may shatter it. I sit here alone with my head bowed and my hands tightly clasped, and I am miserable and happy, too, a sort of ecstasy, do you understand? Have you not felt this tumult? You who are married felt this on your marriage day—mad desire to be free one moment and the sweetness of surrender the next. I know that many of you weep with me in the dead watches of the night, and you will understand. But what is that? It sounds like Jack's step. If he should come back what should I do? I cannot say, I am not a god.

Oh, a letter! No, a telegram! I am just a bit afraid to open it, but you all look so curious, and I have told you so much that I feel I owe you the rest.

What is the matter with my heart? Do you not hear it? It is rising in my throat! What could there be in a few signs of ink to send my foolish heart into my throat?

Do not look over my shoulder. Let me read it through first. Am I so pale as this glass makes me appear? Be still! You all move about so and the paper moves, and the little words are dancing over the page. The lights are going out!

How long have I lain here on the floor? Am I in the dark alone? Ah, I remember! It suddenly grew dark and somehow I fell. I believe I have cut my hand with the paper knife. What are these bits of glass all about me? I have broken my mirror and rudely scattered my company.

Oh, the telegram! Mr. Jack Meredith, Washington, D. C.: Sail Thursday. Join us at Walton.

SUSANNE.

It is for Jack, but what is Jack's? Is mine, they say. Ha, ha, what a ghastly joke!

That is every word, but the world is changed. Jack has gone abroad with the Old-fields.

Susanne has had infinite patience. She is plain, but the gods seldom make a woman both beautiful and patient. She would be invincible.

What consolation there is in the thought that Susanne is commonplace!

Blouses that are plain in the center-front, and have a few tucks next the armhole, are stylish this season and are excellent for embroidery and also for the very popular blouse of colored net, lace, or chiffon, over a thin white lining for wear with a skirt that matches it in color.

OXYDONOR

OXYGEN BY ABSORPTION. A scientific instrument, invented and perfected by Dr. H. Sanche (after 40 years of study and practical demonstration)—the medium by which oxygen acts upon abnormal conditions of the body, restoring normal balance of health, and preserving it against further attacks. The instrument is small, and can be used without inconvenience anywhere, and at any time, quickly relieving acute cases.

Oxydonor was successfully introduced in Washington sixteen years ago, and hundreds are now in use. We find it necessary (after many requests) to open permanent local offices for the sale of the instrument, and where advice can be obtained for the proper use of same in complicated cases.

Physician's Indorsement After Seventeen Years' Experience With Oxydonor. Sept. 22, 1908.

Dr. H. Sanche: Dear Doctor: During the past eleven years I have continued to use Oxydonor extensively in my practice. There is no remedy in either "school of medicine" that can equal it in reducing temperature. Neither can the strength and vigor produced by its proper use be obtained by medicine.

Having used Oxydonor seventeen years, I realize that it is the most wonderful curative power we have. The two cases of tuberculosis I wrote to you about ten years ago—both patients continue in perfect health. At the time these cases were made, tuberculosis in advanced stages (as both were) was classed as incurable.

Knowing that I have given Oxydonor sufficient test, both before and since graduating in medicine, I feel justified in writing to you so frankly, and where my patients follow advice given me have never failed to appreciate its wonderful effects.

The three other cases of tuberculosis under treatment at the time I wrote you have entirely recovered, and continue in good health; also the two mentioned above. Very truly, LOUISE NORTON LEXMAN, M. D., 1511 13th St. N.W., Washington, D. C.

Many convincing testimonials from well-known residents and descriptive books can be obtained gratis in the office, 1225 F street north-west, second floor.
